& Miss Maybelline!

Babysitting "BB"

Anyway, when BB arrived I thought Pandora's Box had been opened in the living room of our house. She was running around, barking and sliding across the floor like a wild thing. I let her know very quickly that I wasn't interested and was thinking to myself, "how long is this going to last?"

I thought this past month was going to be a horrible mess, but what I thought sounded like a bad idea turned into a little extra rest for me.

Let me fill you in. We (and when I say we, I mean the lady of the house) volunteered to babysit - "puppysit" - for a family member's new puppy. Of course, this puppy is a weiner-dog - I'm beginning to see a trend here. I'll admit she is quite a cutie. She is a brown and white spotted, similar to Miss Maybelline, and she has the cutest little tail. It was broken when she was younger (not sure how) and it causes you to give her a double take. Her name is "BB." Her big brother is "Bullet." (Cute, right?)

It didn't take long for me to realize that having BB around was going to take some heat off of me. Remember how Miss Maybelline liked to tug on my "jowl?" Well, guess what...turn about is fair play. It seems that is common among those weiner-dogs and BB has decided to stretch out Miss Maybelline's Jowl.

While those two are running around tearing up the house, yard, barn...whatever, I'm getting some real peace and quiet. Puppysitting is great!

When they finally wear themselves out, they are content to fall asleep anywhere. That means I don't have to share my bed or have Miss Maybelline's feet in my face! Yeah, me!

I have to admit it, I'll be sad to see the little brown and white ball of energy leave.

Resting peacefully,

Bella
