Breaking Records

I heard my people talking the other day about and old saying. It has something to do with the month of March coming in like a lion and going out like a lamb, or vice versa - that is Latin for the reverse - so in like a lamb and out like a lion. (French now Latin....are you impressed with all of my culture yet?)

Anyway, I didn't understand the whole idea of the lion vs lamb thing, but I don't think we are adding to the menagerie (there I go again) of creatures here at the farm. I think it has something to do with the weather....and I am assuming here, but I'm thinking the lion brings more unpleasant weather than the lamb and one comes at the first of the month, the other at the end.

The people are leaning towards wanting the lion to show up first and just getting the worst of it over with. I can't say as I blame them....I mean, we have had the most snowy winter ever recorded and as I am writing this we are due to have more snow in the next few days. Not to mention, it has been record breaking COLD.

I'm not sure that those are the kind of records I want to be a part of breaking. "Most Cheeseburgers Eaten By A Jack Russel" or "Jack Russel Terrier Wins Best Of Show Record Number Of Times" seem to be more up my alley.

Speaking of breaking records. Did you watch the Winter Olympics? There were all kinds of records being broken over there in Sochi, Russia. The United States did very well and I was entertained by my people getting excited and yelling for them to "ski faster, jump higher and play harder."

Even though all of the athletes were really good, I have to admit that my favorite story was about the US Olympians that decided to help with the stray dogs of Sochi.

I watched a little on TV about how there are lots of dogs in Sochi that don't have homes (I heard that happens here in the US too), the dogs there depend on the people of the city to throw them scraps. I can't imagine what life would be like without my people and a warm place to sleep. (Not to mention the food.)

Sorry to be a "Debbie Downer," that brings up my public service announcement for the month: "Spay and neuter your pets."

Breaking records - still taking care of business in record time....until that lamb shows up!
