More Fun with Chuck the Chicken

So, last month I introduced you all to Chuck, the rooster that thinks he's a dog. I 'll admit, I was kind of poking a little fun at the guy with his "cock a doodle doo" and his flogging of Miss Maybelline. (Did I mention I thought I seen him "wag" his tail feathers?)

Anyway, I don't think I realized how serious this problem was getting until I noticed that Chuck was hanging around the doors to the house a little too much. I think he has decided he wants to be a house dog. Ruh Roh!!

T h a t ' s right, the family was enjoying supper one evening around the kitchen table (I don't think they were having dumplings...whew!) and Chuck decided he wanted to get be part of the meal - not literally, of course.

He flew up as close to the door as he could and let us know he was there with his typical annoying rooster call. To be honest, I got a little worried....I mean, Miss Maybelline and I are the only critters allowed in the house and I was hoping the people wanted to leave it that way.

My people didn't let me down. Chuck got a little of his own medicine in the form of a people flogging. (Now, that's something funny to witness if you've never seen one!) Chuck took his place back with the outside dogs and seems to be content once again just hanging out with Duke and Freckles.

I still need to learn that chicken dance....
or maybe that people flogging dance....
